Balance

The news from Minneapolis about ICE agents shooting another civilian has upset me. Random violence like this does not leave me indifferent.

These are globally turbulent times. There have been turbulent times before. When the known world was not much bigger than the Roman Empire, circumstances for the non-elite Romans – or their collaborators – were dire. People thrown to the lions and other wild animals served to amuse the privileged and distract the audiences from their own situation. People were publicly crucified if they stood in the path of the powerful. Jesus did not fear the powers of the day. He did not start a militant movement, or a guerrilla war. He gathered a group of unarmed people teaching the way of shalom, peace, non-violent resistance. The first Jesus followers had to change their minds about what real power looks like. Real power comes from within, not from anything outside. They had to repent, turn around, turn away from the 'normal' way of ruling it over others, to become servants of each other instead. This is not easy. Two thousand years have shown just how difficult it is to change the human condition, the intuitive reaction to cruelty. If I am hit, my first impulse is to hit back. Controlling this impulse is what we are called to do. Self-control is the basis for the ability to love our neighbour and even our enemy. I am not afraid of what is outside of me. Rather, I fear what lives inside.

A poem of today, to illustrate the point, by American poet Amanda Gorman.

We wake with no words, just woe and wound.

Our own country shooting us in the back is not just brutality;
it's jarring betrayal; not enforcement, but execution.

A message: Love your people and you will die.

Yet our greatest threat isn't the outsiders among us,
but those among us who never look within.

Fear not the those without papers, but those without conscience.

Know that to care intensively, united, is to carry both pain-dark horror for today and a profound, daring hope for tomorrow.

We can feel we have nothing to give, and still love this world waiting, trembling to change.

If we cannot find words, may we find the will; if we ever lose hope, may we never lose our humanity.

The only undying thing is mercy, the courage to open ourselves like doors, hug our neighbour, and save one more bright, impossible life.

Count your blessings. Corina
